Actionable Themes: Issues and Opportunities

The Aging with Dignity and Independence Initiative was conducted as a partnership with The Patterson Foundation, SCOPE, and the University of South Florida Sarasota-Manatee. Issues of dignity and independence were critically important to the foundation’s benefactor, Dorothy Patterson. As Mrs. Patterson aged into her 80’s, she was resolute and successful in remaining independent throughout her life.

The broad goal of this initiative is to enhance aging with dignity and independence in Sarasota County. A yearlong discovery phase engaged over 500 persons, representing the full range of demographic and geographic diversity of the community. The project sought to listen and learn about the lived-experience of older adults as well as persons of all ages to better understand the experience of aging in Sarasota County. An advisory committee comprised of diverse providers, volunteers, experts and stakeholders in aging provided guidance and input throughout the project. (Table 1.) Through several modalities, an in-depth understanding of how persons experience dignity and independence within the context of the community and social interactions was gained. (Table 2.) The data revealed what mattered most to people as well as both supports and challenges to dignity and independence throughout community life. The aggregate findings provide important information about the key issues faced by persons aging in this community, as well as many opportunities to enhance dignity and independence in the course of daily life throughout Sarasota County. The key findings are presented as “Actionable Themes,” that could result in action to improve people’s lives. (Figure 1.)

Sarasotans informed this report via several ways of participation. The advisory committee helped guide the process. Hundreds of older adults contributed to focus group discussions and surveys. More than 200 community members of all ages and walks of life shared their input electronically and in community forums. Because concepts of dignity and independence are inherently subjective, this study prompted participants to personally define the concepts, which were later classified by themes across all respondents. In addition, people shared experiences and recommendations on tangible ways in which dignity and independence could be supported throughout this community. The stories solicited from the community provided a collective voice to capture the many positive interactions occurring among people aging in Sarasota County.
As described by the participants, the meaning of dignity was defined as: self direction, the opportunity to make personal choices, self-reliance and self sufficiency, respectful treatment of self and others, sense of self pride and self worth, self acceptance and by others, behaving with maturity, and making decisions through the end of life.

“Dignity means being treated as the competent, intelligent person I am. It means having someone ask what I would like rather than tell me what I need. It means having choices and having a voice.”

“Being self-sufficient and not becoming a burden on or dependent on others.”

“Being respected, and treated as a resource for the years we have lived and experience/wisdom we have gained.”

“Dignity means being able to live a lifestyle that provides the essentials of food, shelter, medical, and spiritual AND having quality connections with people that respect and value one another.”

“I don't believe anyone can give you dignity. You give yourself dignity. What people or communities can do is give you respect and acceptance.”

“…being able to make decisions for myself such as accessing or choosing not to access intensive medical care.”

The meaning of independence was described as: self reliance for transportation and maintaining one’s household, performing personal care activities, financial independence, making one’s own decisions regarding living arrangements, freedom to choose activities and have a social life, and helping others through volunteering or caring for others.

“So I got my license…I got my independence. I got my life.”

“Independence means the ability to dress self, feed self, bathe self”

“Privacy and living in my own apartment is important to maintaining my independence.”

“Not having to rely on my children to send me money... or take me in to live.”

“I do have a little fear that if I get older they [my kids] might try to take care of everything, I mean, say “this is what you’re gonna do.”

“Independence means the ability to take part in any and all aspects of one’s community.”

“I’d say many of the volunteer jobs that I’m doing, I feel welcome and I feel valued.”
The six “Actionable Themes” represent both concerns and opportunities. Though presented distinctly, there is connection and overlap among the themes. For example, Respect & Social Inclusion is tied to Meaningful Involvement; Aging in Place is linked to Transportation as well as to Communications & Information. Consequently, collective actions that address individual themes are likely to benefit other issues as well. By recognizing these issues that matter most, the broader community can seize the opportunities to make Sarasota County an even better place to grow older. This report is designed as a catalyst, as individuals, organizations, businesses and local government consider:

What actions can significantly enhance dignity and independence for older adults in Sarasota County?

Meaningful Involvement

The importance of making a difference and giving back are part of what matters most and enhances one’s dignity and independence. Older adults want the freedom to personally choose areas of interests in which to become involved. Pride in one’s accomplishments help support one’s dignity.

Participants report contributing in a variety of ways including utilizing leadership and skills, giving their time and energy to lifelong or newfound passions, or sharing their wealth of expertise with others. Involvement through such actions as volunteering, working and teaching provide people with not only a sense of meaning and purpose, but help foster connections and relationships that support active aging as well as benefit the broader community.

There is particular interest in peer-to-peer support as a way to help others in daily living as well as significant life events. For example, many help others cope with the range of life experiences encountered in aging such as loss of partner, depression, health concerns, and care giving.

People want their personal contributions of time and talent to have meaning and value to others, as well as be respected for their contributions. This includes work, both paid and unpaid.

In some instances, community members viewed older adults as role models and expressed valuing the skills and passion brought to their community involvement.

What people said...

“Dignity means …having choices and having a voice.” Female, age 70+

“Independence means the ability to take part in any and all aspects of one’s community.” Female, age 70+

“I think dignity has a lot to do… with still learning and still being proud of accomplishment in your life... just because you’re old doesn’t mean that you can’t add accomplishments in your life!” Male, age 75+

“Being active and a part of the community. Being an observer is not enough.” Male, age 70+

“What matters to me most is giving back to this community.” Female, age 80+

“It is important to have a purpose to my living and that I am valued for my involvement.” Female, age 70+

“She was determined...not to feel sorry for herself, and that she was going to be the best that she could be, in order to preserve her mind, her health and her lifestyle, and she was a group leader in our discussions, encouraging others to do better.” Male, 60+
Opportunities to Consider

How might our community develop more opportunities for meaningful engagement in all sectors?

In what ways might employers be educated regarding the untapped value of older employees and develop creative ways to offer flexibility in benefits and sharing of responsibilities?

How should the community maximize retraining opportunities for prospective older employees?

What opportunities might be developed to meaningfully engage and tap the talents of homebound seniors?

How might older adults be tapped to provide peer support for others challenged by life circumstances?

Ideas from the Community...

- Create a training module to educate businesses
- Develop a library program to “check out a person” to share their experiences
- Older volunteers provide technology training for others
- Develop an assessment for organizations in order to develop meaningful volunteer roles
- Train peer volunteer coordinator positions in nonprofits and other businesses
- Create a team of homebound adults who could make weekly calls to other homebound seniors

Respect & Social Inclusion

Aging with dignity is enhanced by respectful behavior and social inclusion throughout our community. Though many people indicate positive interactions in general, others report experiences of disrespectful interactions in a variety of encounters. People report being judged on the superficial basis of hair color or slowed mobility; assumed to be incompetent due to vision or hearing difficulties; or talked around as if the older adult isn’t present. Many identify these interactions as condescending and patronizing. Attitudes of impatience and indifference are evident from professionals as well as the general public. Of particular disdain for many is the language used in addressing people including terms such as “honey” or “girlfriend.”

These negative experiences are noted in casual encounters with people of all ages – including other older adults- and in interactions with health care and other service providers and businesses throughout the community. Older adults identify the need to raise public awareness to counter ageist ignorance, in part, by increasing opportunities for intergenerational interactions.

Although many report the ease of maintaining social involvement and even prefer the camaraderie of others at the same stage of life, some report issues with isolation, the lack of family, and difficulties in developing relationships in the community.

Positive actions which support or enhance aging with dignity and independence include proactively inviting people into a range of new social networks as well as honoring the older adult’s desires in all areas of daily life decision-making.

What people said...

“Dignity is being recognized as a full adult who is due respect, whatever the physical condition or appearance.” Female, age 70+

“My most serious problem is trying to make people understand that because I’m 91, I’m not a moron.” Female, age 90+

“As I get older some folks treat me as less intelligent because I take more time to make decisions or actions. I do this because I know my reaction time has changed.” Female, age 75+

“I don’t believe anyone can give you dignity. You give yourself dignity. What people or communities can do is give you respect and acceptance.” Female, age 85+

“Some younger people think we are hopelessly behind with technology and they talk down to us sometimes.” Male, age 65+

“The world can get smaller as we can get around less. It’s easy to see how I could feel left out of what matters -- already technology is moving beyond me… It could become easy to feel forgotten.” Female, age 65+

“My (older relative)shared...that she felt very isolated but didn’t have the energy to ‘start over’ in her current retirement community ...I realized the best thing I could do would be to connect her with others…” Female, age 25+

The Aging with Dignity and Independence Initiative is a partnership with The Patterson Foundation, SCOPE, and the University of South Florida Sarasota-Manatee. This brief identifies one of six themes and serves as a catalyst, providing knowledge and resources to stimulate action. Opportunities to Consider

What bold actions might this community undertake in all sectors (families, businesses, service providers) of society that will reduce ageism?

How might the community further promote natural intergenerational engagement?

How might the community showcase positive examples of respect and inclusion to resonate with people of all ages?

Ideas from the Community...

- Develop a cadre of trainers to use the Aging Sensitivity Kit
- Sarasota County is a Community for a Lifetime – have zero tolerance PR campaign against ageism
- More training in businesses for handling customers who have cognitive deficits such as Alzheimer’s
- Medical offices create space and structure to ensure that patients have the time to assimilate the information about health issues and medication
- Create a dignity awareness campaign directed at medical facilities
- Use libraries as a connection space for different generations
- Maximize naturally occurring opportunities for intergenerational engagement (ex. YMCA, Girl’s Inc, Boys and Girls Clubs, etc.)
- Create more intergenerational opportunities (Tech Boot camp at Senior Friendship Center is a good example – www.friendshipcenters.org)

Access to information and resources is vital to aging with dignity and independence. Staying connected with events and activities and the ability to obtain timely, practical information to manage one’s life is necessary to meet daily personal needs. Although there is a wide variety of information available to people through a multitude of formats, many residents remain unaware or ill-informed about what’s available. For example, people report inaccurate, limited or contradictory information about many resources such as financial assistance, transportation, health care and home care. Rapidly evolving information and communication technologies are seen as helpful by some and limiting by others. Many older adults are online and able to access information, yet many report the difficulty of navigating conflicting informational sources. Others report feeling left behind by technology.

In addition, people report that knowledge of the programs, services, and activities is insufficient. People overwhelmingly express the need to further discuss information via feedback with others. Some people report problems communicating with automated sources in which there is no opportunity to speak to a live person. Of particular concern is information accessed by those who are isolated. It is critical to provide relevant information, readily accessible, to all people, with varying capacities and resources.

Positive actions which support or enhance aging with dignity and independence include assisting older adults in an internet search, making sense of care options and sharing links to resources.

What people said...

“I wish there were a centralized clearing house that listed activities... I wish there were an electronic bulletin board or something like that.” Female, age 65+

“...I have found a lot of information that I have also passed on to others...you’ll be surprised on what’s available to you, but you got to get out there and ask for it” Female, age 70+

“Something that is lacking here... A lot of people don’t know what to do about their medical bills or long term care, things like that. Every new person who comes should be with an older resident...or somebody in charge, to inform them of everything we have to offer here.” Female, age 75+

“Not knowing where to go for help would be a barrier to my independence” Male, age 75+

“She was exposed to others with similar problems and everyone shared their thoughts and concerns in a ‘safe’ environment with caring individuals.” age 65+

Opportunities to Consider

What community strategies could increase access to information about programs, resources and services?

What are the opportunities for creating on-line portals to information for older adults?

What possibilities are there to develop and test an interactive platform for listing resources and sharing recommendations from older consumers?

Ideas from the Community...

- Use libraries as a hub resource location
- Create a virtual senior center
- Create opportunities to encourage “peer to peer” information exchange
- Develop a cadre of volunteers who spread resource information
- Create a traveling speakers bureau of retired professionals who talk about issues
- Create a social media site for connections and referrals and links to information
- Create an Angie’s List for seniors

The service provides a full-range of home care, companion and home maintenance support services from seniors who enjoy helping at reasonable hourly rates for seniors who want services and reasonable hourly wages to seniors who provide them.
HEALTH & WELL-BEING

One’s personal, social and mental health impact aging with dignity and independence. While numerous participants express that they haven’t yet experienced any “great” challenges to their dignity or independence, others describe a variety of health conditions and disabilities that adversely impact their lives. For many, sensory deficits in vision and hearing impact their social well being by limiting interaction with others. Others report that deteriorating health and mobility affects self-care abilities, thereby increasing their dependence on others. This can strain social networks.

Mental health issues are identified as another affront to one’s dignity. Issues include dementia and depression, as well as difficulties coping with life course events such as declining health, caregiving and loss. Widowhood is widely reported as a particularly difficult time of adjustment. Maintaining control in the course of end-of-life care is identified as an important aspect of dignity.

Many people report a range of strategies to remain resilient in the face of health assaults. Personal attitudes, proactive health practices, and connecting with others who have undergone similar experiences are widely noted to help maintain one’s sense of dignity and independence. In the face of health concerns, dignity was also supported by health care providers and services specializing in aging issues.

In the course of daily living, both tangible and emotional support were valued and appreciated by the older adults navigating health-related conditions.

What people said...

“Illness is the greatest challenge to dignity…” Female, age 75+

“Not being able to take care of myself. Number one (challenge to dignity.)” Male, age 70+

“The most serious problem in my daily life is the loss that comes as family and friends become ill and die.” Male, age 80+

“My wife developed Alzheimer’s… and of course I took care of her… so that has been a tough, traumatic experience.” Male, age 75+

“It’s a very, very different way of life when you lose somebody who you’ve been married to for a long period of time, even though you know there was an illness prior. It’s very difficult to accept. You think you’re prepared and you’re not… it’s just so overwhelming.” Female, age 85+

“The thing that helped me the most was the support group [after my wife’s death.]” Male, 70+

“…being able to make decisions for myself such as accessing or choosing not to access intensive medical care.” Female, age 75+

“The husband was her caregiver, but was very frail and ill himself. She was bed-ridden… How he loved and NEEDED to talk; to talk of his military service…his on-going volunteerism at the hospital…” Female, 75+

The Aging with Dignity and Independence Initiative is a partnership with The Patterson Foundation, SCOPE, and the University of South Florida Sarasota-Manatee. This brief identifies one of six themes and serves as a catalyst, providing knowledge and resources to stimulate action. Further information about the findings, project methodology and additional resources may be found at www.scopexcel.org.
Opportunities to Consider

In what ways can older adults take charge of maintaining their own health?

How might older adults connect with the information, knowledge, services and programs needed to help them manage and cope with health issues and caregiving needs?

What mechanisms might be developed to help people take the time to make decisions for end of life planning?

How can older adults be more aware of and more willing to seek support for mental health issues?

Ideas from the Community…

- Bring relevant programs to faith organizations (e.g. expand education on depression in a non-threatening manner in a safe environment)
- Medical offices create structure to ensure that patients have the time to assimilate the information about health issues and medication
- Meals on Wheels volunteers could deliver books and movies from the library for the homebound adult
- Meals on Wheels volunteers could phone the homebound person once or twice a week.
- A cadre of homebound adults could make weekly calls to other homebound seniors.
- Libraries could become hubs for opportunities to arrange opportunities for active aging
- Have the parks and recreation departments provide even more programs to help older adults stay active

AGING IN PLACE

Aging in place is essential to aging with dignity and independence according to people in the community. People report that their dignity is based on being self-sufficient and self-reliant, yet many express concern about being able to remain in their home. They report needing tangible assistance in order to continue to live independently. People report difficulties in completing housekeeping duties as well as the upkeep and maintenance of the home’s exterior and yard.

Participants report several challenges impacting the ability to live comfortably and safely in one’s home. Some report needing assistance to cook and clean, while others are home bound and unable to access needed goods and services. And while some older adults can manage activities to remain independent such as shopping, many report needing assistance in other areas like getting the groceries off of the shelf or carrying the groceries into the home.

Although there is some awareness of the need for assistance at home, people report safety and trust concerns in inviting others to help in their homes. Others report being unable to find such help or are unaware of supportive services to assist aging in place.

The continued capacity to age in place is of large concern. Issues included the affordability to remain in one’s home and the limited range of other living options according to the participants who were considering a move to better meet their needs.

Positive actions that demonstrated support for aging in place include coordinating neighborhood efforts to provide lawn maintenance and helping an elder manage medications to prevent side effects and hospitalizations that might lead to nursing home placement.

What people said...

“The economy has affected all of us. It’s harder and harder to survive financially.” Male, age 75+

“I would like to know where I can get a handy man that I can trust to come into my home and do things we can no longer do.” Male, age 75+

“My greatest concern is being able to take care of myself without depending on others.” Female, age 70+

“Another problem is having to be so cautious about scammers and people out to take advantage of an older person.” Female, age 70+

“Well, I love my children but I would not want to live with any of them...we have our ways and they have theirs and they think their way is the way you have to do it.” Female, age 75+

“It really kind of bugs me that there are so few condos in Sarasota where you can easily walk to grocery stores, pharmacies, restaurants, etc. I’m worried about what will happen when I can no longer drive.” Female, age 65+

“Wondering where I will be able to live when my money and health require another place. If I could afford a retirement place...But the places I have seen are VERY expensive.” Female, age 70+

“People in my neighborhood don’t traditionally stop working until they are about 80. They still take care of themselves and their immediate surroundings...We support them by doing the ‘heavy lifting’, helping them with the upkeep of their housing and yards.” Female, age 60+

The Aging with Dignity and Independence Initiative is a partnership with The Patterson Foundation, SCOPE, and the University of South Florida Sarasota-Manatee. This brief identifies one of six themes and serves as a catalyst, providing knowledge and resources to stimulate action. Opportunities to Consider

How might grocery stores make it easier for older shoppers?

What buddy systems could help older adults manage their lives, e.g. medications and diet?

What might be developed to vet and refer trustworthy professionals and handymen to assist in the home?

What systems might be created by neighbors, clubs, faith organizations or associations to help with the maintenance of homes?

Ideas from the Community...

- Establish vetted home maintenance services for older adults in Sarasota County
- Develop and promote “informal” neighborhood approaches to meet existing needs
- Create a service to match people who can provide simple services to older adults who need them
- Neighborhood newsletters could list “safe and trustworthy vendors”
- Future neighborhoods should be planned with basic services close by
- Provide low income grant or loan programs for adding Universal Design/aging in place features to people’s homes
- Develop services that can help people navigate and manage their medical bills
- Grocery stores could provide volunteers who help you shop

TRANSPORTATION & MOBILITY

Transportation and mobility represent the key to independence for many participants and 80% were still driving. Yet anticipation was regularly voiced, “What options will be available to me when I am no longer able to drive?”

Issues of safety in transportation and mobility are also of prime importance to people. Many participants identify current driving and traffic conditions as particularly difficult to navigate and worsening. Public transportation options are described as costly and limited. Some concerns were based on misinformation about public transportation.

Some participants note a sense of vulnerability when walking in their neighborhoods. Pedestrians report a lack of “walkability” which impacts physical activity and socialization as well as obtaining necessary goods and services.

Participants describe self-reliance as key to both their dignity and independence and indicate not wanting to burden or rely on others for assistance in meeting their needs. However older adults will surely become increasingly socially isolated without the development of innovative and creative solutions to improve affordable and safe transportation options in the community.

Community members demonstrated support for the older adults’ dignity and independence by providing transportation, both urgent or recreational, or facilitating outings and activities to keep those without means, mobile and connected.

What people said...

“I’m like Cinderella, when I go out I have to make sure I’m home before dark.” Female, age 75+

“... take my car keys away and I’d be lost.” Female, age 80+

“I got my license, I got my independence, I got my life....” Female, age 70+

“It’s just beginning and I don’t like what I see for the future. I don’t drive as much or as far. My world is getting smaller.” Female, age 70+

“Without accessible public transportation, many people will live in isolation more because they won’t know who to ask, fear of rejection, and desire not to bother others. This will increase mental and physical decline.” Female, age 70+

“It really kind of bugs me that there are so few condos in Sarasota where you can easily walk to the grocery stores, pharmacies, restaurants. I’m worried about what will happen when I can no longer drive.” Female, age 65+

“Using SCAT bus system is not an option – I could not get to a bus stop and could not wait in the heat.” Gender/age unknown

“They could rely on this transportation (volunteer drivers) every Sunday morning rain or shine...” Male, age 70+

Opportunities to Consider

How are people/groups/organizations mobilized to better meet the needs of large numbers of older people who will be unable to drive?

How can local businesses be part of that solution?

What neighborhood strategies might be further developed and replicated?

How can communities create and promote ease of access to services without relying on use of a car?

Ideas from the Community...

- Encourage businesses to provide ITN scholarships and host open houses to obtain volunteers
- In parking garages, have small buses to take drivers from the garage to their destination
- Introduce smaller buses to penetrate more deeply into residential neighborhoods
- Bus benches and sun shelters should be a top priority
